THREE PRISONERS ARE COMMITTED TO THE JAIL

Two Beloit prisoners and one from Clinton were turned over to the county jail this morning, to serve sentences under the commitment law. George Garber was committed to serve six months for a serious statutory charge against a fourteen year old girl. James Sullivan was committed for a period of ten days, for being drunk and disorderly.

Ernest Olson of Clinton, was brought to serve ten days for intoxication. "It's a long way to Tipperary," but you can reach it with a want ad.

WOMEN SHOP-LIFTERS IN CHANGE OF VENUEATTORNEY FOR THREE ROCK-FORD WOMEN CONTENDS COURT IS PREJUDICED.*DUNWIDDIE IN PROTEST

Court is Obligated By Law to Grant Motion, and Case Will Now Come Up Before Judge Grimm in October.

As was expected, the three Rockford women, Mrs. Fred Nelson, Mrs. L. M. Green and Mrs. Thomas Halcro charged with grand larceny, took a change of venue from the Janesville municipal court yesterday afternoon at five o'clock, which means that their case will be continued until the October term of the circuit court for Rock county. None of the three defendants appeared in court, or were they in Janesville, as far as could be learned, but the legal transactions necessary to effect the change of venue were made by Attorney Charles E. Pierce, who has represented the trio since their arrest late in March. It will be remembered that when the case was brought up last in the municipal court on April 22nd, it was stated in open court that if another adjournment was granted the women would appear on the 29th of May. Pleading guilty to the charge of grand larceny which faces them, and receive their sentences. After the case had dragged in the court since the 15th of March, when they were first arraigned, and had been adjourned twice, Attorney Pierce filed the affidavits made by each of the women, separately, claiming that Judge H. L. Maxwell had prejudiced and that "they could not receive a fair extension of time to the three Rockford alleged store raiders.

Attorney Pierce took exception to the statements and declared that "they were going to stand on their legal rights." The people and the newspapers have created a sentiment around this case, which is an unjust trial may result, declared Pierce. "When laymen and the press begin to advise the court—it is time to stop and consider the result."

It was explained by the defending lawyer that it was not his personal desire to take the venue change, but an investigation made by L. M. Green, the husband of one of the women, convinced Mr. Green that it was for the protection of his wife and the two others that the case be transferred to the circuit court before Judge Grimm.

Judge Maxwell granted the change of venue and the legal papers will be filed with the clerk of the circuit court today or Saturday. Unless some agreement can be reached for a special hearing the case will not appear until the October term. No change was made in the thousand dollar bail which each of the women had provided.

History of Case. On March 18th the three women were arrested in this city for alleged shoplifting operations of the most skilled and advanced type and they were lodged in the county jail until Monday morning. Their "shopping trip" to Beloit and Janesville had netted them nearly five hundred dollars worth of choice merchandise from five Janesville stores. Chief of Police Champion recovered three suit cases, several bundles, that were concealed in the lockers at the Beloit station which contained merchandise enough to start a small store. On Sunday, March 14th, the Beloit and Janesville merchants identified the goods and an inventory at wholesale value showed that the total amount taken was $525.00.

On the following Monday, March 15th, the three appeared in court and were represented by Attorney Pierce to answer a warrant charging grand the court adjourned the case, this time until May 20th.

One reason for the taking of the change of venue is evidently the direct result of the action of a committee of Janesville business men, who were victims of the alleged shoplifters, when they visited the municipal court recently and urged in no mild terms that no further delay be granted in bringing the case to trial or the women should be sentenced immediately if the case they pleaded guilty. The merchants took stand unless the three Rockford women were brought to justice there was a local drugist and pharmacist, loose hands, double skirts, loose waists and other nefarious equipment of experienced shoplifters.

RETURN FROM STATE MEETING AT OSHKOSH

Eight Industrial and Evening School Instructors Attended Conference That Closed Last Night.

The eight Janesville delegates, who attended the Industrial and Continuation School conference at Oshkosh on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, returned to this city last night reporting a very successful meeting. The local delegates were, Louis McCarthy, local drugist, and instructor of the evening school and Wednesday class; Principal C. F. Hill of the Industrial and Continuation schools; Frank Mohr, instructor in telegraphy; Miss Grace Munroe of the Industrial school; the Misses Gertrude Buchholz, Ida Lund and Klingebell of the evening school sewing department; and Miss Maude Inman of the millinery department.

Miss McCarthy and Mohr gave reports on their lines of instruction and progress made. Both reports were entirely satisfactory and promising for future accomplishment in their lines. The report made by McCarthy was unusually interesting in view of the fact that his class in pharmacy here is the only one in the state among evening schools, outside of Milwaukee.

Principal C. F. Hill gave an address on "Simple Mechanics" for all day boys and permanent boys. Three hundred delegates, including speakers, teachers and others attended the conference. Governor Philipp was to have addressed the gathering. His business duties forcing him to cancel the invitation.

BOYS GIVE NUISANCE WITH CHALK WRITING

Seem to Find Pleasure in Defacing Buildings and Fences With Obscene Writings.

Obscene writings and pictures found on the buildings and fences of the Janesville Fair Association at the fair ground has caused members of the board of directors much trouble lately. The writings continue to be added too with the result that the board of directors must take strict means to punish the guilty parties. Sunday one of the members happened to the grounds and apprehended four school youngsters who were amusing themselves by chalking lurid caricatures and otherwise defacing the property. He took their names and will make trouble for them if any more such writings are discovered. Another instance of chalk writings by school children has come to the attention of a member recently installed as janitor in one of the local buildings. The writings covered the morning and night the culprits gathered and continued their obscene and defacing chalking. Neighbors in the vicinity of the school found the young school-boys so much of a nuisance that the police were called to disperse the gathering one evening. Although the boys still continue to congregate the writings have been discontinued.

'TIZ' FOR SORE, TIRED FEET—AH!

"TIZ" is grand for aching, swollen, sweaty, calloused feet or corns.

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet: no more burning feet: no more swollen feet: no more calloused feet: no more soreness in corns, callouses, bunions.

No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ." "TIZ" is the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. "TIZ" cures your foot trouble so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore and swollen. Think of it, no more too, misery, no more agony from corns, callouses or bunions.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug store or department store and get instant relief. Wear smaller shoes. Just once try "TIZ." For a whole year's foot comfort for only 25 cents. Think of it.

Goethe and the Cherry Tree.

When I was a boy, I planted a cherry tree, and watched its growth with delight. Spring frosts killed the blossoms, and I had to wait another year before the cherries were ripe—then the birds ate them; another year the caterpillars; then a greedy neighbor; then the blight. Nevertheless, when I have a garden again, I shall plant a cherry tree—Goethe.

CHAPTER XVII.

I Am Forced Into Being a Hero.

SITTING alone in my study late in the afternoon smoking a solitary pipe of peace, I remembered Mr. Bangs, the lawyer, the man with the top button off. What had become of him? His presence, or, more accurately, his absence suddenly loomed up before me as the forerunner of an unwelcome intrusion of my privacy. He was no doubt a sort of advance agent for the Titus family and its immediate ramifications. Just as I was on the point of starting out to make inquiries concerning him there came to my ears the sound of tapping on the back of Rud Ludwig's portrait.

I rushed over and rapped resoundingly upon Ludwig's pudgy knee. The next instant there was a click, and then the secret door swung open, revealing the eager, concerned face of my assistant.

"What has happened?" she cried.

"I hit her out of the frame. Her arm fell upon the bandaged fist.

"Mr. Bangs spoke of a pistol. Don't tell me that he—he shot you?"

I held up my swollen hand rather proudly. It smelled vilely of amon.

"This wound was self-inflicted, my dear countess," I said, thrilled by her expression of concern. "I had the exquisite pleasure—and pain—of knocking your former husband down."

"Oh, splendid!" she cried, her eyes gleaming with excitement. "Mr. Bangs was rather hazy about it, and he would not let me risk telephoning. You knocked him down?"

"Emphatically," said I.

"She mused. 'I think it is the first time it has ever happened to him. How—how did he like it?'"

"It appeared to prostrate him."

"She smiled understandingly. 'I am glad you did it, Mr. Smart.'"

"If I remember correctly, you once said that he had struck you, countess."

Her face flushed. "Yes, on three separate occasions he struck me in the face with his open hand. I—I testified to that effect at the trial. Every one seemed to look upon it as a joke. He swore that they were—were love pats."

"I hope his lack of discrimination will not lead him to believe that I was delivering a love pat," said I grimly.

"Now tell me everything that happened," she said, seating herself in my big armchair. Her feet failed to touch the floor.

When I came to that part of the story where I accused Tarnowsky of duplicity in connection with the frescoes that betrayed intense excitement.

"Of course it was all a bluff on my part," I explained.

"But you were nearer the truth than you thought," she said, compressing her lips. After a moment she went on: "Count Hohendahl sold the originals over three years ago. I was here with Maria at the time of the transaction and when the paintings were removed, Maria acted as an intermediary in the deal. Hohendahl received $200,000 for the paintings, but they were worth it. I have reason to believe that Maria had a fourth of the amount for his commission. So, you see, you were right in your surmise."

"The internal rascal! Where are the originals, countess?"

"They are in my father's villa at Newport," she said. "I intended speaking of this to you before, but I was afraid your pride would be hurt. Of course I should have spoken if it came to the point where you really considered having those frescoes restored."

"He will challenge you," she went on nervously. "He has fought three duels. He is not a physical coward." Her dark eyes were full of dread.

I hesitated. "Would you be vitally interested in the outcome of such an affair?" I asked. "I mean on Rosemary's account. He is her father, you see. It would mean—"

A slow flush mounted to her brow. "That is precisely what I was thinking, Mr. Smart. It would be—unpleasantly dreadful."

I stood over her. My heart was pounding heavily. She must have seen the peril that lay in my eyes, for she suddenly slipped out of the chair and faced me, the dust dying in her cheeks, leaving it as pale as ivory.

"You must not say anything more, Mr. Smart," she said gently.

A bitter smile came to my lips, and I drew back with a sickening sense of realization. There was nothing more to be said. But I now thoroughly understood one thing—I was in love with her!

I was something of a philosopher. I submit that my attitude at the time of my defeat at the hands of the jeweler's clerk proves the point conclusively. Quite before I knew it I was myself again, a steady, self-reliant person who could make the best of a situation, who could take his medicine like a man.

She was speaking of the buttonless lawyer, Mr. Bangs. "He is waiting to see you this evening, Mr. Smart, to discuss ways and means of getting my mother and brothers into the castle without discovery by the spies who are undoubtedly watching their every move."

I drew in another long, deep breath. "It seems to me that the thing cannot be done. The risk is tremendous. Why not head her off?"

"Head her off? You do not know my mother, Mr. Smart. She has made up her mind that her place is here with me, and there isn't anything in the world that can—head her off, as you say."

"But surely you see the danger?"

"I do. I have tried to stop her. Mr. Bangs has tried to stop her. So has father. But she is coming. We must arrange something."

I was pacing the floor in front of her. She had resumed her place in the chair. "My deepest regret, countess, lies in the fact that our little visits will now, at an end. Our delightful little suppers and—"

"Oh, but think of the comfort it will be to you—not having me on your mind all the time! I shall not be homesick; I shall not be afraid; I shall not be forever annoying you with selfish demands upon your good nature. You will have time to write without interruption. It will be for the best."

"No," said I positively. "They were jolly parties, and I shall miss them."

She looked away quickly. "And if all goes well I shall soon be safely on my way to America. Then you will be rid of me completely."

I was startled. "You mean that there is a plan afoot to—struggle you out of the country?"

"Yes. And I fear I shall have to trouble you again when it comes to that. You must help me, Mr. Smart."

I nodded slowly. Help her to get away? I hadn't thought of that lately. The prospect left me rather cold and sick.

"I'll do all that I can, countess."

She smiled faintly, but I was certain that I detected a challenge—a rather unkind challenge—in her eyes. "You will come to see me in New York, or course."

I shook my head. "I am afraid we are counting our chickens before they're hatched." One of the other of us may be in jail for the next few years."

"Heavens!"

"But I'll come to see you in New York if you'll let me," I cried, trying to repair the damage I had done. "I was jesting when I spoke of jail."

Her brow was puckered in thought. "It has just occurred to me, my dear friend, that even if I do get safely away you will be left here to face the consequences. When it becomes known that you sheltered me the authorities may make it extremely uncomfortable for you."

"I'm not worrying about that."

"Just the same, it is something to worry about," she said seriously. "Now, here is what I have had in mind for a long time. Why don't you come with me when I leave? That will be the safest plan."

"You are not in earnest!"

"Assuredly. The plan is something like this: I am to be taken by slow stages overland to a small Mediterranean port. One of a half dozen American yachts now cruising the sea will be ready to pick me up. Doesn't it seem simple?"

"It seems simple enough," said I. "But there are a lot of ifs between here and the little port you hope to reach. It will not be an easy matter to manage the successful flight of a party as large as yours will be."

"Oh," she cried. "I shall be quite alone, except for Rosemary and Blake—and Mr. Bangs."

"But your mother? You can't leave her here?"

"You will have to smuggle her out of the castle a day or two in advance. It is all thought out, Mr. Smart."

"By Jove!" I exclaimed, with more irresponsibility than I intended to show. "If I succeed in doing all that is expected of me, I certainly will be entitled to more than an invitation to come and see you in New York."

She arose and laid her fingers upon my bandaged hand. The reckless light had died out of her eyes.

"I have thought that out, too, Mr. Smart," she said quietly. "And now, goodby. You will come up to see Mr. Bangs tonight?"

Considerably mystified by her remark, I said I would come, and then assisted her through the opening in the wall. She smiled back at me as the portrait swung into place.

Bangs was a shrewd little Englishman. As I shook hands with him—using my left hand with a superfluous apology—I glanced at the top of his waistcoat. There was no button missing.

"The countess sewed it on for me," he said drily, reading my thoughts. "I stayed late with them, discussing plans. Mrs. Titus and her sons were to enter the castle under cover of night, and I was to meet them in an automobile at a town some fifteen kilometers away, where they would leave the train while their watchers were asleep, and bring them overland to Schloss Rothboefen. They would be accompanied by a single lady's maid and no luggage. A chartered motorboat would meet us up the river a few miles, and—well, it looked very simple. All that was required of me was a willingness to address her as 'mother' and her sons as 'brothers' in case there were any questions asked."

This was Tuesday. They were coming on Thursday, and the train reached the station mentioned at half past 12 at night. So you will see it was a jolly arrangement.

As we said good night to the countess on the little landing at the top of the stairs she took my bandaged paw between her two little hands and said: "You will soon be rid of me forever, Mr. Smart. Will you bear with me patiently for a little while longer?"

She seemed strangely subdued.

"I can bear with you much easier than I can bear the thought of being rid of you," I said in a very low voice. She pressed my clumsy hand fiercely, and I felt no pain.

"You have been too good to me," she said in a very small voice. "Some day, when I am out of all this trouble, I may be able to tell you how much I appreciate all you have done for me."

An almost irresistible impulse to seize her in my arms came over me, but I conquered it and rushed after Mr. Bangs as blind as a bat and reeling for a dozen steps or more. It was a most extraordinary feeling.

Bangs was chattering in his glib English fashion as we descended to my study, but I did not hear half that he said.

One remark of his brought me rather sharply to my senses.

"It all goes well," he was saying, "she should be safely away from here on the 14th. That leaves less than ten days more, sir, under your hospitable roof."

"Less than ten days," I repeated. "This was the 5th of the month. 'It all goes well. Less than ten days.'"

Again I passed a sleepless night. She came to visit me at 12 o'clock the next day. I was alone in the study. Puopendyke was showing Mr. Bangs over the castle.

"I came to dress your hand for you," she said as I helped her down from Rud Ludwig's frame.

Now, I have neglected to mention that the back of my hand was swollen to enormous proportions, an unlovely thing.

"Thank you," I said, shaking my head, "but it is quite all right. Britton attended to it this morning. It is good of you to think about it, countess."

"You will never let me do anything for you," she said. Her eyes were wet. "It isn't fair. I have exacted so much from you, and—"

"And I have been most brutal and unfeeling in many of the things I have said to you," said I despairingly. "I am ashamed of the nasty words I have given you. My state of repentance allows you to exact whatever you will of me, and when all is said and done I shall still be your debtor. Can you, will you pardon the coarse opinions of a conceited ass? I assure you I am not the man I was when you first encountered me."

She smiled. "For that matter, I am not the same woman I was, Mr. Smart. You have taught me three things, one of which I may mention—the subjection of self. That, with the other two, has made a new Alina Titus of me. I hope you may be pleased with the transfiguration."

"I wish you were Alina Titus," I said, struck by the idea.

"You may at least be sure that I shall not remain the Countess Tarnowsky long," Mr. Smart," she said, with a very puzzling expression in her eyes. My heart sank. "But I remember hearing you say not so very long ago that you would never marry again," I mused.

She regarded me rather oddly for a moment. "I am very, very glad that you are such a steady, sensible, practical man. A rapid, impressionable youth, during this season of propinquity, might have been so foolish as to fall in love with me, and that would have been too bad."

I think I glared at her. "Then—then, you are going to marry some one?"

She waited a moment, looking straight into my eyes. "Yes," she said, and a delicate pink stole into her cheek. "I am going to marry some one."

I muttered something about congratulating a lucky dog, but it was all very hazy to me.

"Don't congratulate him yet," she cried, the flush deepening. "I may be a very, very great disappointment to him and a never-ending nuisance."

"I'm sure you will—will be all right," I floundered. Then I resorted to gaiety. "You see, I've spent a lot of time trying to—to make another woman of you, and so I'm confident he'll find you quite satisfactory."

She laughed gaily. "What a goose you are!" she cried.

I flushed painfully, for, I give you my word, it hurt to have her laugh at me. She sobered at once.

"Forgive me," she said very prettily, and I forgave her. "Do you know we've never given the buried treasure another thought?" she went on, abruptly changing the subject. "Are we not to go searching for it?"

"But it isn't there," said I, steeling my heart against the longing that tried to creep into it. "It's all balderdash."

She pointed her warm red lips. "Have you lost interest in it so soon?"

"Of course, I'll go any time you say," said I, listlessly. "It will be a lark, at all events."

"Then we will go this very afternoon," she said, with enthusiasm. My ridiculous heart gave a great leap. "This very afternoon," I said, managing my voice very well.

She arose. "Now I must scurry away. It would not do for Mr. Bangs to find me here with you. He would be shocked."

I walked beside her to the chair that stood below the portrait of Ludwig the Red and took her hand to assist her in stepping upon it.

"I sincerely hope this chap you're going to marry, countess, may be the best fellow in the world," said I, still chasing her hand.

She had one foot on the chair as she half turned to face me.

The Meanest Man Once More.

I have at last discovered the very meanest man. He is the fellow who somehow manages to get you to tell everything about yourself, and then shuts up like a clam and manages to make you feel you have been a garrulous fool.—Judge.

Dinner Stories

Two men went into a barber shop to have the customary improvement made in their appearance. When it came time for the boy to hand them their coats and whisk them off, one of them tipped him a dime and the other a dollar. Outside the barber shop one said to the other: "You were a fine chump to give that boy a dollar. What did you do that for? Looking himself over with satisfaction, the friend replied: 'Well, look at the coat he gave me!'"

FILES ANNUAL REPORT ON FIRE DEPARTMENT

FIRE CHIEF H. C. KLEIN MAKES HIS ANNUAL REPORT TO COUNCIL.

WANTS IMPROVEMENTS

Would Change System of Fire Hose Throat to Conform With Other Cities—Recommend More Auto Apparatus.

Fire Chief H. C. Klein in his annual report accepted by the city council Tuesday night, favored the complete standardization of the fire hose of the city of Janesville to the National standard thread which is recognized throughout the United States as standard. By the changing of the present "Bastard thread" to that of the National size, it would mean the elimination of hose thread trouble and would allow the city to be able to both receive and give aid to nearby cities in times of emergency.

As an initial start to place the fire alarm wires underground in the congested district, it was recommended that two thousand feet of galvanized iron pipe be purchased for the laying of the lead covered alarm cables.

The motor equipment of the department was reported as giving excellent satisfaction and it was recommended that more motor apparatus be purchased in order to give the outlying districts better protection. The report is as follows:

To the Honorable, the Mayor and Council of the City of Janesville, Wis.

I have the honor to submit my annual report as Fire Chief of the Fire Department.

Number of fire stations, 3. Four officers and 19 men. Also independent fire police company, 20 members.

Number of fire alarms responded to, 86, a majority of which were "still alarms."

The following is the equipment in service:

One motor driven combination chemical and hose outfit.

One motor driven chief's car with chemical tank.

One straight hose wagon.

Two combination hose and ladder wagons.

One 65-foot aerial ladder outfit.

One first class steam fire engine.

One second class fire engine, in dangerous condition.

Fire alarm telegraph system, consisting of 75 boxes, of which 6 are owned by private parties.

Aggregate amount of losses by fire for 12 months ending December 31, 1914, was in round figures, $7,000.

A number of improvements, repairs and replacements were made the past year, some of which I mention and are as follows:

During the month of December 1914 the department received 500 feet of new fire hose; this was purchased as a replacement on account of a like amount given the retired department during the year 1911.

At the last year it became apparent that 40 of our old type fire alarm boxes were in an unreliable condition. This was reported to the mayor and he instructed our chief engineer to repair the same. This the mayor and myself deemed was an exorbitant price, whereupon the new material was purchased in the open market and fitted in the boxes by hand, and has not cost to exceed $100. Nearly all of these boxes have been at this time repaired and the balance will be attended to as soon as possible, for which I have material on hand.

During the past year the preliminary steps were taken looking forward to the complete "National standardization" of our fire hose threads, of our hose couplings, etc. This the "National thread" is the recognized standard throughout the United States, being seven and one-half threads to the inch and measuring three and one-sixteenth inch on the outside of the male thread. By the adoption of this thread we will eliminate past thread troubles on hose couplings and will be able to give and receive aid from our nearby towns, being Madison, Rockford and Beloit, who now have this "National thread."

Improvements are at this time being made at No. 1 fire station, being the painting of the apparatus room, the replacement of part of the roof and new floor made of cement has just been completed in No. 2 fire station.

During the spring of 1914 six pieces of fire apparatus were painted at a cost of about $165.

An initial start to place fire alarm wires underground in the congested district, your chief engineer will recommend that 2,000 feet of Byers or standard galvanized iron pipe be purchased to be used as underground conduits for the insertion of lead covered alarm cables.

I will recommend that three alarm boxes be purchased and located at the following points: One at the corner of Palm and Ravine streets, one at the corner of River and Dodge streets and the other at the corner of Prairie and St. Mary's avenues; also that the box now located at the corner of Prairie avenue and Walker street be moved one block south.

The two pieces of motor driven fire apparatus now in the department have given the following years of service: The first being the chief's car, which has been nearly four and one-half years and the other more than two years. They are now giving the best of satisfaction. To better serve the outlying districts as well as the heart of the city, your chief engineer will recommend that two motor driven apparatus be purchased and located especially at that one be purchased suitable for a squad outfit.

Respectfully submitted, H. C. KLEIN, Chief Engineer.

HODGINS' GREAT EUROPEAN SHOWS

The Most Original and Diverting of Tented Shows.

There is a rare treat in such a show as Albert Hodgins has brought from Europe for American pleasure seekers.

Here is a show under canvas containing the best known European acts of the hippodrome, all highly exciting and skilled to the point of real finish. Apart from the Indian Life Act of Chief Wau-Tan and his tribe, every feature of the performance is from beyond the boundaries of the United States. In a way, those who love the tradition of the old time ring, clown, the pantomimists, and single specialists of the sawdust ring will have a unique and genuine treat in this show.

Since the first appearance of these shows in the United States, they have enjoyed unbroken popularity and the greatest attendance. They have been lauded by the press and public, and with reason. The performance is as bright and sparkling as that of any stage, everything said and done is audible and clearly visible and our new seating arrangement makes it possible to attend our performance with as much comfort as is afforded in any modern theatre. Two performances, afternoon and evening, will be given in Janesville on Saturday, May 22.

Doors open at 1 and 7 p. m. Grand outside free exhibition on the show grounds preceding each performance. Show grounds, South Franklin street and Western avenue.

Edgerton News

Edgerton, May 20.—The Edgerton jitney bus which has now been running for the past two weeks has been a great success and Mr. Whitte is thinking of putting a couple more cars in service. Mr. Whitte has not as yet any regular schedule or route, but will take anyone anywhere they want to go. He makes a practice of meeting all the trains and will convey all persons anywhere in town and even farther if they wish to go. Sunday Mr. Whitte makes a special trip to the river, as many of the young people of this city go to the river to spend the day. The plan has been considered by many of the prominent citizens of this city and all think it will work out to be a big success.
